The outroges which took place on the 18th instant at Kongwang, on the Shanghai and Woosung Railway, though much to be regretted, do not signify either any accession of animosity towards foreigners or opposition to the railway on the part of the natives. citable disposition of the Chinese, foreigners should be careful to refrain from striking thom, Not only are such acts sure to provoke an instantaneous demonstration of hostility, but boy are also highly calcul lated to engender ill-feeling not easily allayed. The Chinese will not submit to a blow, and it would no doubt be better to smother resputment, if possible, on some occasions rather than provoka an outbreak, the results of which can never be properly gauged. Foreigners have an idea that it is impolition to allow the Chinese the slightest pretence for imagining that they fear them, added to which they feel a natural reluctance to pass over an insult from a people they hold to be in many respects inferior. Such collisions as those at Kongwang will, consequently, be always liable to occur. It is impossible to make all the natives courteous put the rein upon their indignation and wrath when insulted without pretext. No doubt, as the Chinese come to know foreigners intimately, a great many projudices, and false notions concerning them will vanish and disputes become infrequent. It would be too much to hope, however, that at any time intercourse between them will ever be of so harmonious a character that misunderstandings will never arise

A shocking instance of judicial barbarity in China is related by the Foochow Herald. A wretched man who was caught in the act of plundering during the recent inundations bas just been starved to death in the inost inhuman manner by the native officials of Foodbow. He was placed in a wooden cage at the South Gate of the city and supplied with a few drops of congee per diem, just sufficient to prolong his agony, but not enough to assuage the pangs of hunger or thirst-In this miserable condition the unhappy victim of judicial cruelty lingered for eight k ng days, suffering the most dreadful torture. Such barbarity is of itself sufficient to prove how far removed the Chinese laws are from the humane and enlightened principles that guide Western nations. Our horror of this cruelty, however, and our condomnation of it, will not allow forgetfulness of the fact that it is not so very long ago since the Inquisition practised almost equally flendish tortures, and that, too, in the sacred name of religion. After all there is more excuse for the Chinese inflicting these fearful punishments on criminals than for that most monstrous institution, which for the sake of maintaining the ascendoncy. of the Roman Catholic faith was guilty of cruelties at the relation of which mankind shudders, and which have done much to undermine the influence of religion all over the Continent. None the less, though, do we deplore the indifference to suffering manifested throughout the Central Kingdom, and which may be taken as a certain sign of the great poverty prevailing in most parts of the Empire. The struggle to support existence is so severe in many districts that the people grow strangely selfish and apathotic. The Japanese Government has just abolished the practice of torture, and the example is one that should commend itself to the Government of Peking. It is not a desirable or LONDON Mr. F. Algar, Clement's Lane. creditable thing to any nation to be thus loft. in the rear in every movement. But it is a d'fficult thing to rouse the Chinese officials to action, even when they admit the justice and expediency of any change. It would not be difficult, doubtless, to find some Chinese officials whom the narration of the Foochow starving ease would move to pity and indignation, but it would be much harder to find one who would recommend, much less attempt, agitation on the subject. All reform, all change is in China regarded with aversion. No wonder that progress is slow, tain both. REVULUTIONS IN THE INDIAN

TRADE.

M. do Leceeps' grand idea has brought the

Indian carrying trade into a new phase of existance. That trade has passed through three distinct stages. The first was in the palmy days the old East Indiamen, floating mansions, with appoious accommodation, and every luxury. that could make the monotony of a residence in them tolerable. White the Bo abou Castle or the Marquis Wellesley lay berthed in the dooks intending passengers paid them frequent visits, to see to the furnishing of cabins that were in reality little bedrooms. They laid in lines for the half year or so during which they were to lispense with the services of washerwomen and they were disposed to seemality. like Mr. Joseph Sedley, they did not trust to the iberal commissariat of the ship but provided a special sea stock in the shape of claret and cognar and casks of sod water. And baving completed their leisurely proparations, they went by road to some port down Channel where the ship was to pick them up. There was no seramble or bustle then, as in those times of cheap correspondence and postal contracts. The captain came assore and put up at the chief inn, that he might make, an app rtunity of showing bospitality to bis fature passengers. The last evening in England was relabrated by a grand dinner, and the sorrows of parting from home and friends were submerged in the excitement of a new society, or drowned in the wineglass and the punch bowl. These captains in the old Company a service were bir men who had fallen on their feet. They had opportunities of were doing excellent business in profituble monopolies. They were entitled to a handsome percentage when they carried the precious motals in freight, They made money fast and invested it in Leadenball-street, till they came to be held in double respect by their owners; a few prosperous voyages enabled them to retire if they pleased, and to some of them the service became a stepping-stone to places on the Board. At the same time they bad no small inducement to stick to their calling. Pecuniary considerations apart, their position was singularly

The Emperor Napoleon, who was always generous of Government help for patriotic interprises, enabled the Messageries Imperiales to underbid them. Then followed the revival of commercial enterprise in Italy, and the establishment of lines of Italian packets plying to Alexandria from Italian barbours. Still they might have been to usted to hold their own, had not the opening of communications brough the isthmus changed all the features of the Indian trade. As one of their veteran officials remarked in a spirit of desponding prophecy, That big ditch will be the death of us." although it is to be honed the prediction may be falsified by events, there was unfortunately too much in it. An impulse was given to judis. criminate competition. Great firms in London and Liverpool built long serew steamers for cargo, with a vast capacity of tonnage. Small adventurers followed in the wake of the leviathank, frequently coming to sudden grief, but quidating bravely and going on again. Ecaders in Bombay and elsewhere chartered vessels on their own account for particular voyages. Many of these ships carried passengers cheap. The Peningular and Oriental had to rovice their tariff, at a general reduction of 30 per They met the more economical views of their patrons by selling wine, Ac., to those who asked it instead of foreign it upon everybody gratis and ad libitum. Extracts. THE YOUNG GAZELLE. (A Moore-ish Tale, from "Songs of Singularity.") The antelope, whose feet shall bless. With their light squad thy loneliness. "Light of the Harem." In early youth, as you may guess, I revelled in pactio lore, And while my schoolmaster studied less. I resolutely studied Moore. Those touching I res from "Lalle Rookh,"-"Ahl ever thus you know them well, Such root within my bosom took, I wished I had a young gazelle. Oh, yes! a sweet, a sweet gazelle. "To charm mo with its soft black eye." So soft, so liquid, that a spell . Seems, in that gentlike orb to lie. Years, chilihood passed-youth fied away. My vain desire I'd learn'd to quell-Till came that most ausnicious day When some one gave me a gazette. With care, and trouble, and expense, "I'was brought from Afric's northern cape: It seem'd of great intelligence. -And oh! so beautiful in shape. Its lustrons, liquid eye was bent With special lovingness on mo; No gift that mortal could present More welcome to my heart could be. I brought him food with fond caress, Built him a hat, soug, neat, and warm The wark'd s(e)lim-ness of his force. The little creature grew so tame. The "learn"d to know (the acishbours) well And then the ladies, when they came Oh I how they "nursed that dear vizalle." But, woo is me |- on earthly ground Some ill with every blessing dwells And soon to my dismay, I fullid That this applies to young gazelles. When free allowed to room indoors, The mischief that he did was great The walls, the furniture, and floors' He made in a terrific state. He nibbled at the table-cloth. And tred the carpet into holes, And to his gambols, nothing loth, Kicked over sortiles full of coals. To view his image in the glass, He reared upon his hinder legs. And thus one morn I found, alas Two porcelain rases smesh'd like eggs. Whatever did his fancy catch By way of food he would not wait To be invited, but would snatch It from one's table, haud, or plate. He riled the dog, annoyed the cat. And scared the goldfineh into fits; He butted thre' my hewest hat, And tore my manuscripts to bits. 'Twee strange, so light his booflets weigh'd, His limbs as alander as a hare's. The noise my little Selim make In trotting up and down the stairs. To tie him up I thought was wise, -But less of freedom gave him pain I could not stand those pleading eyes, And so I lot him go again. How sweet to see him skip and prance Upon the gravel or the lawn : More light in step than foiries dance More graceful than an English fawa. But then he spoilt the garden so, Trod down the beds, raked up the sell, And ate the plants nor did he show The least compunction for his deeds. He trespassed on the neighbourn ground, And broke two costly melon-frames, With other damages -- a pound.

A PLEASANT RECOLLECTION. waiting for the Duke was to watch from the window the movements of a bright pretty little girl seven years of age. She was in the habit of watering the plants immediately under the window. It was amusing to see how impartially sho divided the contents of the watering pot between the flowers and her own little feet. Her simple but becoming dress contrasted favourably with the gorgeous apparel now worn by the little damsels of the risin r generation—a large straw hat and a suit of white cotton; a coloured fichie round the neck was the only ornament she wore. The young lady I am describing was the Princess Victoria, now our gracious Sovereign, whom may God long preserve -" Fifty Years of My Life," by George Thomas, Earl of Albemarls.

He proved a very "dear gazolie."

At length I sighed-" Ah I ever thus,

But 'tie in vain to make a fuse,.

You'll have to go, my antelope."

The chance I wish'd for did occur,

A lady, going to the East,

That little antelopian beast.

I said. "This unifered desert child

In Torkish palaces may roam,

Yes; the I gave him up with tears,

Experience had broke the spell,

I'll never have a young gazelle.

But he is much too free and wild

To keep in any English home."

And if I live a thousand years,

Was willing, so I gave to her

A LEGEND OF MULL. A lady writes to the Nether-Lochabe correspondent of the Inverness Courier :- " need not, of course, ask you if you know the very fine pipe tune 'Macrimmon's Liment. Cha till me tuilleadh. When I was a girl the Hebridge, I am afraid to say how many years ago, I often heard the following story associated with this tune. In the island Mull there is a large cave which in popular belief reaches right across the island from the east shore to the west. This cave, in the old times, was inhabited, so ran the tradition, by a colony of wolves and other wild soimals. No man in consequence had ever the courage to explore its-dark labyrinthing windings. At a wedding party assembled in a haulet in the neighbourhood of the cave. its vastness and many dangers became the subject of conversation. All agreed that no hum in being could possibly pass through it and live. The piper of the district was a very brave mon as well as an admirable piper and in an evil hour for himself, as it proved, he offered for some slight wager to traverse the cave from side to side of the island, with a pine torch stuck in the front of his bonnet to give him light, and playing the pipes all the time. The piper theroupon entered the the wedding guests followed above, led in the proper course by the music, which could: music changed from a brisk march to a dolefel lament. This lament, duly interpreted, told the people above that things were becoming uncomfortable with the piper-first, that the pine torch was almost burned out. and again that his breath was failing him, whilst the boldest of the wolves slowly retired before him, only kept at bay by the flickering of the torch and the sound of the pipes, but ready to the spring upon and devour him the instant the torch should be extinguished and the music of the pipes should cease. It was then that the doomed piper played "Chatill mi tuilleadh " so mournfully, I wi return no more . And this too-

Flattery may for our own present purposes be roughly defined as a bestowal of praise by complimentary word or action to a degree not actually supported by the giver's deliberate conviction. There are obviously two things to be distinguished here—the desire to praise, and the insincerity of the laudatory action. Now praise itself is clearly a pleasant thing universally desired, and it is only a suspicion of its gennineness which makes it of doubtful value. If in any way all grounds for this suspicion can be removed or hidden from Zapadnik, or Western, may reply, " Moussight, it is evident that the flasterer may carry on his soothing art with perfect success; undoubted character and intellectual ability tobacco, and potatoes have been cursed by who are extremely slow to detect the hollowness of any piece of praise accorded to them. smokes tobacco dries out of himself the among public officials, there are many who drinks ten must not hope for salvation." rigidly scrutinising the nature of the sweets Russia bas flown a Chinese dart, and fixed thus tendered, seem to count on a certain itself in the pensant's heart," More conamount of flattering attention as a perquisite solutory than these statements is the schissense of his own merits in order to derive larly conservative, but conceived in a rationa this amount of gratification from the unsifted spirit, are the moujik's opinions with regard praise of others. RUSSIAN PROVEEBS. When Peter the Great ordered his subjects o shave, these conservative Nonconformists besought him to cut off their heads rather than the beards, and not " to destroy Christ's likeness." From the populty then exacted from them arose the saying, "Without a rouble thou canst not let thy beard grow." R Among ordinary mortals two conflicting proverbe are current. As the moujik is always bearded, he says: "A beard is bonourable, I but even a cat has moustaches to which a I aches for honour, but evens goat has a beard.
